

Over the next 10 years, Dr. King traveled millions of miles, spoke thousands of times, and wrote books. He also helped to organize the peaceful March on Washington, where more than 250,000 people heard him deliver his famous, "I Have a Dream" speech. In 1968, Dr. King was assassinated while standing on the balcony of his hotel room in Memphis, Tennessee. He was there to help lead a protest march for striking garbage workers. His assassination made front page news across the world and many people mourned the loss of this significant leader. His influence and impact still inspires the world today.

"I have a dream that one day on the red hills of Georgia sons of former slaves and the sons of former slave owners will be able to sit down together at the table of brotherhood. I have a dream that one day even the state of Mississippi, a state sweltering with the heat of injustice, sweltering with the heat of oppression, will be transformed into an oasis of freedom and justice.

"I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of the skin but by the content of their character."
